

“The Klosterman Ranch” read that old wooden sign that always looked ready to fall. Mom often said she’d run over that sign, she never did like it at all. But it marked the door to a wonderful place, a place always home in our hearts. A place where our youth was so happily spent and where our adult lives got their starts. Where cleaning was on Saturday. Mom never would let it be dirty. In Spring, Summer, and Fall we’d wait for Dad knowing he’d be home at dark-thirty. This is the place that we all still call home. The place where we always belong. A nice place to visit, where great memories won’t let us stay away for long. Mom and Dad, because of you, we think of this place no matter where we are or what we do. But it’s not the house or farm that make it important. What made home our home, was you!
