

A Wooden Allegory

I love the trees of earth's garden,
Their symmetry, beauty and grace,
Their varied leaves and branches,
Are each special in different ways.

The quaken-aspen are lovely trees,
With their silvery, whispering leaves,
But they stay in groves at the foot of the hill-
Such timid little trees.

While the pine trees march so bravely,
To the top of the hill and down.
And stand up straight on the side of the hill,
As though they would wear a crown.

I pray that all of my children, will be
Like the pine – straight, and true.
And march over life's mountains with courage,
Salvation forever in view.
